

Bruno and Mary Moser moved into their home in 1975. The shady lot had much potential as it had many trees and overlooked the ravine of Happy Hollow Park and a murmuring creek. Mary and Bruno were creative and hardworking and have transformed their home and shady garden into a quiet sanctuary that provides sounds, visual delights, family heirloom plants and several artistic collections.

The visual delights include over 600 pieces of pottery and 30 gazing balls collected during various travels. Squirrels and birds dart through the garden and heirloom plants, such as the Orixa japonica and boxwood, gathered from Bruno's family's nursery accent the space. Mary's favorite is a weeping Red Jade crabapple (Malus 'Red Jade') that frames the kitchen window and offers a cascade of lovely white flowers in April and May.

The back deck was a design project of a Purdue Landscape Architecture class and incorporates seating areas, a view of the park and numerous colorful gazing balls that float and sway in the breeze. Below the deck are more boxwood (Buxus), interesting pottery and numerous shade loving hostas. What a lovely garden!
